

June 2, 2008

About two years ago I was fortunate to become acquainted with Shelly Mellomida professionally and personally as she was referred to me. I have met Shelly only once and since then it's been via telephone-fax-and email. It is becoming all too rare these days to find a person that goes to such great lengths to assist and satisfy customers. Shelly's genuine kindness and generosity has been a blessing that continues to bless us in many areas of our lives. Whether I am interested in purchasing, refinancing, or selling, she is constantly working behind the scenes on my behalf. From updating me on the current value of my home, providing me a snapshot of my financial portfolio, or informing me of any changes in real estate financing, I'm grateful to have her as my advocate.

I believe if there were more people like Shelly, there would be much less people losing their homes today. As for me and my family, she's done far more than help me get a home loan. She's helped us by being there and going to bat for us when no one else would. Life has a way of throwing pitches at you, especially when you're not ready. In my most recent transaction, I was going through some very personal issues. On top of that, I had some serious issues at work I was dealing with and it affected my whole family. The simplest tasks became overwhelming and I knew I could trust Shelly to share this with her. She encouraged and supported me through the whole process, keeping me focused on my financial goal. So many times I wanted to quit and let go like so many people are doing today because of the financial and mortgage crisis. I thank GOD she was there to guide me through the entire process. It's difficult to express how much that truly meant to me and my family during that period of our lives.

Healthy relationships are built on INTEGRITY and TRUST. It's a rare thing to find in today's ever changing industry, and it's always refreshing to know someone that does not change their core beliefs and values, based on market conditions. That's Shelly.

To her, it's not just about the transaction or money, it's about the relationships!

John Munoz & Familia,

Your Client for Life!